Political move Party pad for rent

Anyone keen to follow in the steps of what might be future greatness (or at least sit on its sofa) can rent the property that Bilawal Bhutto Zardari, son of the late Benazir Bhutto and now chairman of the Pakistan Peoples Party, lived in while studying at Oxford. He has already departed (along with his bodyguards — his security costs were estimated at £1m a year) from the £1,085-a-month, two-bed furnished flat overlooking the river near Christ Church, where he read history and politics and gained a 2:1. Julie Gardner, a manager for Finders Keepers, the lettings agent, admits she had to explain how the dishwasher, washing machine and heating worked, as these were new to Zardari, 21, but says he kept the property in pristine condition.
