Secret rooms Tycoon sells up

In Channel 4's The Secret Millionaire, the property entrepreneur Nicholas Leslau went to Glasgow in 2008 to pose as Nick, a trainee social worker, and gave away more than £300,000. Now you can have his house, too — though it's not free. Leslau, who owns Thorpe Park, Madame Tussauds, a private jet and a 100ft yacht, has put his six-bedroom Mayfair mansion on the market for £29.5m. The property, which he shares with his wife, Maxine, and their three sons, has a cinema, a pool, a steam room and a staff flat. Leslau, 51, who is worth £150m, according to The Sunday Times Rich List, bought the property for a more modest £15m in 2007.

At first glance, a top-floor flat in Witney, Oxfordshire, available to rent for £795 a month, looks unremarkable. Yet it comes with a caveat — it is next to David Cameron's constituency office, and prospective tenants are required to undergo police background checks and give character references. They may also be given the occasional once-over by police sniffer dogs ahead of visits by the prime minister. The duplex has two bedrooms and two receptions with exposed ceiling beams. "It is great for the security-conscious," says June Inglis, senior manager of Finders Keepers, which is marketing the property. 01993 700150, finders.co.uk

Chelsea Facelift for Khan's old

Jemima Khan's former house on Chelsea Square is to undergo another big renovation, not long after the socialite spent £2m remodelling it. The 10,000 sq ft basement with stone games room, an office, wine cellar. Now Samantha Khan (daughter of the late pharmaceutical mogul Mortimer Sackler) bought the house for £25m in 2007 for planning permission for a summerhouse in the or
